

AMENDMENTS TO THE SPECIFICATION

Please replace the entire Abstract with the following paragraph, an unmarked copy of which is attached:

-- A camera signal processor comprises having a motion detection means component for dividing an image picked up by an imaging means device into a plurality of motion detection areas, and detecting the motion of the image for each of the motion detection areas, an extracting means component for extracting, on the basis of the motion of the image for each of the motion detection areas which has been detected by the motion detection means component, the motion detection area where an object making abnormal motion exists, and an image enlarging means component for enlarging the image picked up by the imaging means device, centered on the motion detection area where an object making abnormal motion exists which has been extracted by the extracting means component and displaying the enlarged image on a display device. --